Now Blow your Shofar!

The custom of the Purim feast is widespread among the Jews. But the original custom, as instituted by Mordechai, not only involved a festive meal, but an entire ceremony as well. The Purim Seder, as it is known, is similar in nature to one most Jews know from Passover. Until about 100 years ago, the Purim Seder was observed by Jews the world over. But then the custom died out, leaving the Seudah as its only remnant. Recently, however, this lost custom has experienced a revival. Fortunately, all the laws, customs, songs and prayers of Purim Seder can still be found in the Purim Hagaddah, which had been lost, but just recently came to light.
